

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

I currently receive internet access from Iglou.com a local independent service provider. I plan to upgrade my service to DSL and was distressed to learn that the FCC may prevent small companies like Iglou from providing that service. I fail to understand why the FCC would want to limit the provision of DSL service to a handful of companies. I used to get my internet service from one of these companies but changed to Iglou because they are local and provide better customer support and network reliability. I urge you to allow these small providers to continue to provide DSL service.

Sincerely,

Erik Siegel
